How did the Fund perform in the last six months?

During the period June 30, 2025, through December 31, 2025, the Fund underperformed both the Russell 2000 Index and the Russell 2000 Growth Index.

The underperformance relative to the Russell 2000 Index was driven almost entirely by stock selection. Consumer Discretionary, Financials, Health Care, Industrials, and Information Technology sectors were all drags versus the index. Allocation was barely a factor. Being overweight Materials and underweight Financials had the most positive impacts.

The underperformance relative to the Russell 2000 Growth Index was driven primarily by stock selection in the Health Care, Financials, Industrials, Real Estate, and Information Technology sectors. This was partially offset by stock selection in the Materials space. Allocation was a modest positive. Underweights in Communication Services, Consumer Discretionary added to performance versus the index while a Health Care overweight detracted.

During the third quarter of 2025, specifically a huge deficit in September, accounted for most of the underperformance. Unprofitable, high beta companies outperformed while high free cash flow businesses aligned with the Fund's quality bias declined. In the fourth quarter of 2025, our structural zero weighting of no earnings biotechnology stocks was the largest negative.

At the start of 2025, we felt relatively more cautious as valuations in many companies appeared stretched to us while policy and economic uncertainty were building. There will always be sources of uncertainty, but valuations in our quality growth corner of the market appear more attractive to us now. In December 2024 our weighted-average internal rate of return (IRR) expectation for the underlying companies in our portfolio was 9%. Today, it is 14%, largely as a function of lower starting valuations. For the most part, the underlying businesses we've invested in have continued to perform well over the last year. We estimate the earnings of the portfolio grew by roughly 13% in 2025, below our long-term expectations but not outside of normal annual variance.
